Organizations need to rethink how and where work gets done

Mukul Gupta, Founder, Capital Numbers provide agility and resilience, help drive competitive differentiation, and contain costs. Organizations need to rethink how and where work gets done. They need a new framework, not to answer "How soon can our employees be back in the office?" but to answer, "What skills does my organization need, and where can I get those?" People with those skills can potentially be located remotely - reducing the talent acquisition Hybrid models provide agility and resilience, help drive competitive differentiation, and contain costs.

The post-pandemic world is increasingly looking for a hybrid workforce model, i.e., a combination of "at office" and "virtual" teams. Hybrid models time and facilities costs. Capital Numbers helps digital transformation and product teams scale faster by making remote engineering talent available "on demand."

AI will be at the core of digital strategies for businesses

Animesh Samuel, CEO, E42

the technology gap, helping enterprises transform processes across functions with our AI workers. I feel a challenge that still stands unresolved for enterprises is the lack of process-agnostic cognitive automation, for there's not enough of the required know-how and resources. In the near future, I envisage a phase of digital transformation, which will have AI at the core of all digital strategies for businesses of all sizes - a movement from the atoms (human brains) to bits for enterprises, ensuring reliable and efficient decisions across functions.

I feel a challenge that still stands unresolved for enterprises is the lack of process-agnostic cognitive automation, for there's not enough of the required know-how and resources.

The pandemic acted as a catalyst for enterprises to throw their long-overdue digital transformation initiatives into action, a push like never before. At E42, we have been bridging

Creating India's largest Rural Network, Generating 5 Lakh New Jobs

Sameer Mathur, M.D. ROINET Solution

The low-income under-served population at the last mile was disproportionately impacted by the pandemic; the imposition of restrictions and lockdowns blocked access to services and even their livelihood. While formal channels such as banks and financial institutions had difficulties in serving this section, technology firms, like ours, mitigated the gaps by delivering financial and non-financial services in a manner that was accessible to the low-income under-served population. Realizing that many citizens still need assistance while accessing services electronically, our "assisted digital" or "phygital" service outlets across thousands of villages are bringing the excluded population into the formal cash-less channels. Customers and transaction volume on our platform tripled during the pandemic, generating a throughput volume worth $4 Bn. Deloitte and The Economic Times recognized us as the 3rd fastest growing Technology company in FY'21. We remain on the mission of digitally connecting every village and thereby contributing to Government of India's agenda of financial and digital inclusion.
